THE TROUBLE WITH ANDY

JACQUELINE LOGAN sat stiffly on the couch in her living room. It was almost eight o'clock, and Andy would be there any minute, and Jackie had to be prepared this time. There'd been too many other times already. She'd always known exactly how she was going to explain it to Andy and how she was going to be really firm, but when Andy would walk in . . . all of her plans would fizzle away.

The effect that Andy had on her was very disturbing, Jackie had to admit. Whenever she had something bothersome to tell Andy, the instant she saw him everything would change—and either she'd only make some mild reference to the trouble, which Andy would dispel with a humorous story, or she'd forget it altogether.

But this time it wasn't going to be that way, Jackie said firmly, because this time Andy was going too far!

It was bad enough that Andy and animals had a definite affinity for each other. It was bad enough that Andy wouldn't simply pat all animals on the head and leave them alone, but he went too far . . . Andy collected them! He collected every kind he could find, and then he'd train them, pretending all the while that an alley cat was a fierce tiger or a monkey, a man-eating gorilla, or a raccoon, a grizzly bear, and he even used a chair and a cap pistol!

And finally, it was bad enough that Andy was known jokingly throughout the high school as "Andy the Animal Trainer"—but now, Andy was going too far! Just that afternoon she'd overheard a conversation that had put her in her present mood. She was tossing her things in her locker when she heard a girl's voice around the corner of the corridor.

"Guess what!" the voice said in maliciously gleeful tones. "I just heard that 'Andy the Animal Trainer' is going to put on a circus!"

"With all those silly animals of his?" another girl asked incredulously.

"Don't see how Jackie bears up under it," from the second girl. "Those animals must be worse than a female rival."

The two girls wandered off down the corridor, and if this were true, it was definitely more than she'd stand for—and she intended to tell Andy that very night!

The door bell rang, and Jackie walked over and opened it.

"Hi!" Andy grunted, and Jackie began to grin back, but abruptly she averted her eyes and led the way to the living room. She didn't want to succumb to Andy's charm yet. "Wait till you hear the news," Andy said excitedly.

"First," Jackie said firmly as she sat down and began to stare at her shoes, "I have to ask you something."

"O.K.," Andy said easily.

"Andy," Jackie began, "I heard today that you're planning on putting on a circus with all those . . . those animals of yours." Jackie accented the word somewhat disgustingly and waited for Andy to reply.

"That's what I was just going to tell you!" he exclaimed. "I was going to ask you to dress up like a circus performer and be my assistant."

"I will not be your assistant in any animal circus," Jackie declared, "and I suggest . . ."

"But why, Jackie?" Andy interrupted. "I thought you liked my animals."

"Liked is putting it a bit strongly," Jackie said meaningfully. "Anyhow, it isn't so much your animals . . . it's you!"

"Me!" Andy was puzzled.

"Yes, you!" Jackie said emphatically. "The whole school jokes about your being 'Andy the Animal Trainer,' and I never could see why you don't go in for something sensible like football or hockey instead of those silly cats and dogs, and today I actually heard two girls say that those animals are . . . my rival!"

"But I just asked you if you'd be my assistant," Andy said.

Jackie jumped to her feet. Assistant to Andy and all those horrid animals! "Andy," she said, "I've thought about this a lot, and I've made up my mind. Either it's those animals—or it's me. You have to decide."

Abruptly she ran out of the room and upstairs. Several minutes later she heard Andy let himself out the front door.

The next few days Jackie couldn't help worrying. Maybe she'd sent Andy away for good. But on the other hand what was the sense in having a boy friend who thought more about animals than he did about her? Now was the time to find out, she thought.

Finally Andy called. He phoned first while Jackie was out on an errand. "Did . . . did he say anything about his . . . his animals?" she asked when her mother told her about the call.

"No," Mrs. Logan answered. "He mentioned the circus, though."

The circus! If Andy thought he could invite her to a circus to impress her with all the animals and with what he could be some day . . . Suddenly an idea occurred to her. Maybe seeing the ferocious animals and the dangers their trainers obviously went through would discourage him. Maybe he'd realize that training alley cats and raccoons was hardly the same thing as being in a cage with an angry lion.

She'd go to the circus with Andy, Jackie decided. It might work, and if it didn't—well, things would be no worse.

At the circus Jackie insisted on taking a complete tour of the animal tents, and she didn't miss a chance of pointing out how dangerous this or that beast was. Unfortunately, fear, as far as Andy was concerned, didn't seem to be contagious. He'd simply tell Jackie some story about the animal in question that would explain its habits and the proper way to train it.

Still Jackie didn't give up. During one of the animal acts, she was right in the middle of a sentence when suddenly a shriek went up from the seats nearest the performers' entrance.

The word spread through the tent quickly, and everyone immediately began running for exits. "Lion escaped! Going wild! Tearing up the whole circus!"

"Come on!" Andy cried. "We have to hurry!" Jackie was completely in favor of that. The tent was emptying fast. She hurried to keep up with Andy, but instead of leading her to an exit, he guided her to a spot beneath the tiered seats. "Now stay here," he directed, "and you'll be safe. I'll be back for you in a little while."

Jackie was about to protest, but Andy was gone in a second, and then her chattering teeth kept her from calling out. Through the slats between the seats she watched Andy. Quickly he grabbed a chair and dashed to the performers' entrance. Jackie heard a loud growl, and she closed her eyes. Oh, Andy, she thought, come back! You can train cats and dogs all you want—but not a lion!

When she opened her eyes, she seemed to stop breathing.

There in the center ring were Andy and the lion, sparring for command. Whenever the lion would send a paw in Andy's direction, Andy would shoot his cap pistol. A small cage had been left in the ring, and Andy was trying to back the lion into it with the chair. The lion growled and pawed at Andy again, and again Jackie's eyes shut tight.

When she opened them, the lion was backing up the ramp and Andy seemed to be in control. Then another lunge from the lion, another feint with the chair—and the lion was in the cage. Quickly Andy pushed the door shut and bolted it.

Jackie rushed out from her hiding place. At the same time she saw a couple of circus men dash over to Andy. When she reached him, the men were shaking his hand and talking excitedly.

"We were watching you most of the time," one of them said, "but you looked as if you were handling him O.K., so we didn't step in."

"I'm the chief trainer," the other put in, "and I'll see that you get a big reward for this."

Andy looked at Jackie. Admiration and relief were written all over her face in capital letters. "No, thanks," Andy said with a grin. "I think I've already got my reward."

"And you see," Andy explained on the way home, "a lion is, after all, only an overgrown alley cat."

Jackie nodded. "What," she asked meekly, "were you saying about my being your assistant?"

"We'll talk about that later," Andy said masterfully. He smiled at Jackie, and they walked happily home.

PATSY'S CLUB PAGE

Hi, fan club members! Here are just a few of the wonderful letters received from you this month:

Dear Patsy:
My mother tells me that if I want to be popular with my friends, I must always maintain a pleasant disposition. Can you give me some advice on how to do this?

Sincerely,
LORETTA STONE
Dallas, Texas

Dear Loretta:
First of all, a pleasant disposition comes hand in hand with good health. So be sure you're getting plenty of vitamins in your daily diet and plenty of sleep every night. Try to keep pleasant thoughts in your mind, such as that dance you went to last night or your date Saturday night. Help out your friends when they need it, such as with school work, or with a personal problem if they ask for your aid. Keep interested in things that are happening around you... occupy part of your time with a pleasant hobby, and your mellow feeling of contentment will be reflected in your actions and attitudes, and friends will be automatically drawn to you.

Love,
Patsy

Dear Patsy:
I just loved the story about how you saved that man from drowning in Issue #49, and Hedy tried to take credit for it. It was swell of Buzz to turn the tables on her so you could get the reward money. I'm always so pleased when Hedy's tricks backfire.

Sincerely,
CAROL BAKER
Providence, R.I.

Dear Carol:
Of course Hedy is always acting the jealous female and being unpleasant, trying to outshine me in Buzz's affections. But she's never won yet! Somehow, a schemer like Hedy never gets away with her sly tricks. She hasn't learned yet that you can "catch" a beau and gain friends more easily with honey than with vinegar!

Love,
Patsy

Dear Patsy:
My mother and dad say I may go out on dates when I reach my 17th birthday, which is in September. Can you give me some helpful hints on how to behave on a date? Many thanks!

Sincerely,
ROBERTA LONERGAN
Memphis, Tenn.

Dear Roberta:
How wonderful for you that you can accept dates beginning with the new school term in September! You'll have a gay and happy time at those school dances and holiday events. Here's some friendly advice for you which I hope you'll take! First of all, always try to look your best to make a favorable impression. Be ready when your escort calls for you. Nothing shows your lack of consideration for the boy more than keeping him waiting. Show respect for your Mom and Dad and pride in your date by introducing him to your folks before you go out for the evening. No matter where you go together—to a house party or to a school dance—give your date your undivided attention. Don't accept too many dances with the other boys present. Remember, a girl who is faithful and not fickle gets asked again by the boys!

Love,
Patsy

Dear Patsy:
I look forward to every issue of your wonderful comic magazine! And when I've finished reading it, I'm still eager to read more about your exciting adventures and your humorous problems, but I have to wait weeks for the next issue. But, believe me, PATSY WALKER comics is worth waiting for!

Your friend,
ANNA MASON
Los Angeles, Calif.

Dear Anna:
A million thanks for those kind words! But, you know, you don't have to wait for each PATSY WALKER book to reach your newsstand, if you're really so anxious to read delightful stories about me! I, and all my friends, are appearing in three other magazines... PATSY AND HER PALS, PATSY AND HEDY, and MISS AMERICA! You'll find the whole gang featured: Buzz, Nancy, Hedy and Ronnie. Happy reading, Anna!

Love,
Patsy

Dear Patsy:
My family has just moved to a new city and I transferred to the high school here. That means I'll have to develop a new circle of friends. Can you give me some hints on how to get new girl friends?

Sincerely,
MAUREEN DANIELS
Cleveland, Ohio

Dear Maureen:
First of all, always dress your best, so the other girls will be impressed with your neatness and good taste. When they invite you to join them at the soda shoppe or in their home, don't try to monopolize the conversation. Don't be tactless and ridicule a new gown or hat that is shown to you. Be complimentary. At a party, don't try to attract the exclusive attention of another girl's boy friend. You'll become known as a romance-breaker and you'll lose girl friends, but fast!

Love,
Patsy

Well, there's just no room for more this issue! Keep those letters coming! I'll answer as many as I can on the Club Page. Send them to: PATSY WALKER 270 Park Avenue, New York 17, N.Y.
